Court Was Right

In Hackensack, New Jersey, last week, the judge of a superior court had before him the trial of ten men accused of murdering two policemen. The defendants in the case had employed a lawyer from Massachusetts to defend them. While on his way from Boston to Hackensack this attorney wrote a lurid and highly colored account of the case in which he was about to appear, and this article was printed in a newspaper under a four-column head as follows: "The Law Wants Blood."

The article itself was not characterized by moderation or restraint of statement, and when it came to the attention of the trial judge he took judicial notice of it by ordering the name of the lawyer who wrote it stricken from the record, and he sent that gentleman on his way without allowing him to make any defense. The judge took the correct view that the case should be tried in court and not in the newspapers.

The right and wrong of the judge's act can be argued, of course, from one end of the equator to the other. It may be contended that he was depriving the men accused of murder of their choice of counsel to defend them, and that to some degree he was interfering with the rights of free speech and a free press; but that is about all of consequence that can be said on that side. On the other hand the state and the people have rights as well as a person accused of crime, and the New Jersey judge was defending the right of the state to have an impartial trial of the men whom the people had indicted for murder without an inflamed and possibly false public sentiment being created in their favor.

When an attorney interested in a case attempts to create public opinion while the issue is at stake, he is not only engaged in an effort to defeat justice, but he is forgetting that he is an officer of the court. He has no more right to prejudge the case before the public than the trial judge himself has, and good lawyers do not attempt it nor do honorable lawyers think of it. The practice has had its illustrations on this coast, but the few who engaged in it are the failures of the Nevada bar. The New Jersey judge did right.

Expense For Taxpayers

After an expense of not less than $3000, the jury in the latest gambling case returned a verdict of acquittal early Saturday morning in the supreme court. There are several kindred cases already set for trial to follow the trial just ended, but in view of the results, it is apparent that the court will order the dismissal of all defendants.

The jury in returning the verdict stated in no uncertain words that the lack of conviction was caused from the insufficiency of evidence. Particular pains were taken by the members of the jury in bringing this point to the attention of the judge and district attorney, for a number of jurymen were taxpayers and it was evident that they did not approve of the manner in spending county funds in prosecuting a case of this

The verdict of the jury again brings to mind the vagaries of the laws upon our statutes. The gambling law will permit players to engage in a solo game for money, but to engage in a poker game with the same object is unlawful and a penitentiary offense. There is something radically wrong with the law and immediate action should be taken by the legislature in providing the proper amendments.

This is the manner in which the New York-Commercial treats the repeal of the six-months' divorce clause by this state;

"Nevada has passed into the discard as a mecca for would-be divorcees. The famous six-month residence law was repealed by the legislature and hereafter divorce seekers will pay rent for at least a year in
